

DISABILITY AS A CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTION

PhD-student Petar Kichashki, Department of Public Legal Sciences in the Faculty of Law and History at SWU “Neofit Rilski” email: peter.kichashki@gmail.com

Abstract

Does the disability have a constitutional foundation? What exactly is this complex socio-cultural, historical and political phenomenon? What is the place of disability in a modern constitutional society? These issues need to be analyzed and researched thoroughly in order to understand the extent to which the disability goes beyond the scope of employment-insurance or medico-legal issues and enters the territory of the constitution. It is necessary to consider the concept of disability, to analyze constitutionalism as a fundamental issue in the rule of law, as well as to examine the role and place of disability in it.

Key words: constitution, rights of people with disabilities, disability